NEW SAVINGS BANK RECORD FOR STATE PROVEN BY REPORT

Commissioner Chapin Submits Statement Showing All Previous Increases to Be Outelassed.

GENERAL ASSETS UP

Recommends That Insurance Policies Be Accepted by Institutions as Collateral for Loans.

The annual report of Bank Commissioner Arthur B. Ghapin read in the Legislature today shows, besides a large general increase in the assets of the banks and trust companies of the state, a total increase in the deposits in the savings banks of Massachusetts of $33,581,751.45, this being a new record in the history of savings banks in this

The total banking capital of the state is $1,749,826,107.29, divided among 189 savings banks, 53 trust companies, 104 cooperative banks, 4 collateral loan companies, 2 foreign banking corporations, 64 steamship agencies receiving deposits and I life insurance company.

The total amount of money sent to foreign countries fails to reach the figure of last year and falls much farther below that of two years ago. Italy, as usual, leads with $2,137,204 as against $3,107,405 for 1907; Russia, Great Britain and Ireland, Greece, Austria-Hun-

Now, in the first place, is it essential Now, in the first place, is it essential to swing the club back at all? Once the correct stance has been gauged by addressing the club-head to the ball, is there any real reason why the golfer should not, as some one has hinted, "whirl should not, as some one has hinted, "whirl stroke,

The answer is, I think, not at all doubtbringing the club to the suitable position as to throw the club out of its proper from which to start the swing proper. And it is not absolutely essential. In point of fact, a player who has become so practised that he knows exactly the right position for his club to occupy at the top of the swing need not trouble about how he brings the club into that position. My own conclusion, from careful observation of the great professionals, is that many of them - notably Harry Vardon and Massy-not infrequently let the club swing back anyhow, then put it into position at the top of down swing the player allows for this the swing, and play the stroke.

Evenness in the back swing is, for most and yet fast. Only if it he too fast it involves a sudden reversal of the club's motion at the top of the swing, which can searcely fail to result in such a jerk plane. Another danger of too swift an upward swing is that it tends toward over-swinging, because the club is going so fast that it can with difficulty be checked in time.

But there is another factor whose effect must be considered. Whenever the clubbead is moving at a great speed, centrifugal force comes into play, tending always to draw the golfer's hands out farther from his body. Of course, on the as is easily seen from the fact that al-At the same time, it is not a method most every man tees his ball very much which I should advise the common or farther away from him than he would like it to be placed were he only intending to give it a gentle tap. In fact, he tees his ball in what he feels to be the most natural place for his fast swinging club to reach.

On the other hand, at the beginning f the downward swing the club must of necessity be traveling more slowly. this is by no means the position into which his hands will be drawn by a clubr.b., Veeder moving back quickly, with its fastest Hyde, Suder, c....c., Hughes y, l.b., r.f., Heath, Phelps, Carter formmers, r.b....lf., White

If, however, the upward swing be made too slowly, the tenseness of the player's muscles prevents it following its natural curve. But provided it be fast enough to keep this curve, there is nothing to be gained by swinging back any more quickly; was a hard fought contest. News of Players and the Stage, Musicians and Music

News, of the Playhouses

In "The Man from Home," now at the Park theater, Bostonians are enjoying one of the most wholesome and amusing plays that have ever come to the American stage. It offers in its central character of Daniel Voorhees Pike a delightful homespun figure straight from Indiana, witty, resourceful and constantly admirable as played by William Hodge. There are besides many other excellencies, chief among which is the character of the Grand Duke Vasili as played by Henry Jewett.

Mr. Jewett has so elaborated this part, which in its essentials is a mechanical, figure to serve the plot and to provide a passive foil for the active Pike, that; it stands out as a striking feature of the performance. When asked to describe for The Monitor renders the means by which he was able to impersonate the character so effectively Mr. Jewett

Mr. Jewett smilingly recalled incidents of his stage experience of over two decades and passed lightly over them as if they were but the apprenticeship that any player should pass in order to be worthy of being called a good actor. He appeared to be recalling the caretaker on an old English estate, who gave this to a newly rich visitor as a recipe for making a velvety English lawn: "First you plow up the ground and take out all the rocks. Then you smooth it all down nicely and sow it. Then roll it for 300 years and your lawn will look like this

MAUD ALLAN.

SOME people, skeptical of the classic dance, have said that a half bour's exposition of the new art tells all that ean be told about it and that a person who has seen one of the so-called Greek dancers has seen them all. Miss Mand Allan's work proves that such a view is not sound; for as she presented the classic dance at her first American appearance at Symphony hall Wednesday afternoon, there was no repetition, except of course in dances that she gave twice in answer to applause, and there was a decided difference between her work and that, say, of Isadora Dunean.

There are certain motives of color. light, drapery, step, attitude and gesture which all the classical dancers use as the common foundation of their technique; but each of the performers that have in turn represented the new art in Boston this winter-Isadora Duncan, Janet Duff, Loie Fuller, Irene Sanden, Gertrude von Axen, Madame de Pierrefeu and Maud Allan-has used these motives to purposes of expression distinctly her own. In Miss Allan's plan there was observed at the outset a simple and intelligible use of the color motive. The color of the light thrown upon the stage was cool or warm according to whether the mood of the music in which she interpreted was blithe or somber. The colors which were used in subdued tints and one at a time.

The motives of step and gesture used by Miss Allan bore a general resemblance to those used by the artists who have preceded her this season, but her treathead movements play a more important SHIP CAPTURES ment of them was quite new. Hand and part in her dancing than in Miss Duncan's; her steps are the least developed part of her technique; and they are used chiefly for the out and out purpose of eccentuating the rhythm of the music. Miss Allan has a keener sense of the larger rhythm of her music than other classic dancers have shown; she likes to interpret a long musical phrase by dancing across the whole width of her stage, ending with a bound as the music comes to a cadence. The music purely as sound interests Miss Allan, and it is one of her peculiar pleasures to emphasize its harmonic beauties for her listeners. At rare times when she is carrying out some rhythmi-

At least such is the general view taken of the decision by Judge Carpenter of the circuit court, to the effect that the city can use the $3,500,000 traction fund, received as its part of the profits of operating the surface lines, to construct a subway system.

Although there is a possibility that the suit will be appealed to the supreme court of the state, it is thought that the effect of the decision upon legislation will be such as to cause the speedy enactment of special laws giving the city broader powers to construct, lease or operate subways.

After March 31 the maximum tariff rates will be automatically applied to the vast German import trade, and every article of German production coming to America must pay 25 per cent increased duty.

Negotiations have been in progress for months between the two governments to avoid this issue, but an obstacle has been reached in the demand of the state department for the relaxation of the German prohibition against American cattle.

OS ANGELES, Cal.-Evidence that Los Angeles (San Pedro) harbor is grow-Ling in importance is found in the announcement that a system has just been established to handle business from San Francisco to the Nevada gold fields, by way of this harbor. Through tariffs for the enterprise go into effect today. Los Angeles is nearer by rail to the southern Nevada gold district than is San Francisco to the same district by the all-rail routes, hence the arrangement that has been made by the Independent Steamship Company and the Salt Lake and Las Vegas and Tonopah railroads.

A Locomotive With the Cab in Front

One of the Southern Pacific railroad's fifteen articulated oil-burning engines bought during last twelve months.

(From American Engineer and Railroad Journal.) THIS LOCOMOTIVE GIVES ENGINEER A CLEAR VIEW OF THE TRACK.

DID you ever see a locomotive with the engineer's cab in front?

It is now possible with oil-burning locomotives to reverse the ordinary direction of running, making the cab of the ocomotive the foremost point of the train, thus giving the engineer an unobstructed view of the rails ahead of him. Thus the cowcatcher is placed on the cab end instead of the smoke-stack end, a change which is made possible by the fact that the use of oil fuel releases the fireman from service in the tender. This allows him to remain in the cab with the engineer, a thing that would not be feasible were the tender of a coal-using engine thus separated from the cab. This new practise has been introduced on some of the Italian railroads, and has lately been inaugurated on sections of the Southern Pacific railroad, which road received 15 oil-using locomotives during 1909. The order for the construction of engines with the cab ahead was given largely because of the requirements of the service, which calls for the operation of locomotives through tunnels and sheds, in which it was very desirable to have the stack behind the cab in order that the engine crew might not be incommoded by the gases. The engines of the advanced design are entered through side doorways which are reached by ladders. The engineer increase of 21 per cent. The company has been very fortunate ach. this year in having a higher range of prices for raw sugar. To date something over 225,000 bags of sugar have been sold shead, or more than a quarter of the entire crop. Prices have ranged from 211-16 to 2% cents per pound, a full 1/4 cent per pound better than a year ago.

It is predicted that sugar profits in 1910 will establish a new high record just as they did in the 1909 season compared with all previous years. In fact it is probable that sugar profits will run at least around $1,000,000 better than in 1909, when the aggregate earnings at Banes and Nipe were $1,615,000.

Production of the two mills is now running at the rate of between 4000 and Golden Russets 15@17s, Rox. Russets 5000 bags daily.

Thomas J. Caniff, of East Main street, Waterbury, Conn., on Sept. 12, 1905, saved John E. Ross, Jr., and Edward A. | Saum at the plant of the Scoville Manufacturing Company, at Waterbury. The two men, who had been stringing a wire, had permitted it to cross a live wire while each had hold of it. Caniff seized a pair of steel shears, using old rubber shoes to protect his hands, and cut the live wire. He gets a bronze medal.

The floods in the Hocking Valley in March, 1907, again figure in the awards, Jesse E. Patterson, of Athens, Ohio, re ceiving a silver medal for rescuing three persons at that time. George F. Burba, of Dayton, Ohio, an editor, rescued a 12-year-old girl from the river. He got a bronze medal.

It was long an important seat of the whale fisheries and this brought prosperity to the little sea girt community that made for educational opportunities, which with the independent thinking of island peoples brought it about that the people of Nantucket have a quality even today in the decline of the place to little more than a symmer resort—which stamps them as among the most truly representative of New Englanders. The town and the sweet moorland reaches of the Island have an individual charm which no other place can equal for the true lover of Nantucket. The narrow streets of the village are little more than lanes, where flowers from one garden may all but touch hands with those across the way. The summer residences far out on the cliffs interfere little with the original town, which retains all its old-time quaintness, and where a delaying summer guest may spend the shut-in winter days to his great edification and enjoyment. He will hear tales of the brave old days of the town, when shipping crowded the harbor and sailormen from all the world over did congregate on the rude wharves. Every house has

Another Protest Raised

An article entitled "On the Defensive," in the Examiner of recent date, is an other voice raised in protest against the character of much of the so-called "news" published in the daily press. In truth the matter here described is not "news" at all, since wrong-doing is as old as mortality and is so limited in scope that the same old acts are merely rehearsed again and again in varying situations. The good that is going on in the world is always progressive and brings new wonders to light every day. The Exam-

Piano Trade and Merchant Navy

The importance of the piano trade of the country will be generally recognized by well-informed people. It represents a very considerable share of the commercial capital, intelligence and respectability of the country, and in all of these particulars it is well represented in turn by the National Association of Piano Dealers. This body is composed of the intermediaries between the people who make pianos—a very strong industrial group—and the people who buy them—a class of high average in our citizenship. The point is, that in these piano dealers, whose executive committee has just been in session here, we have a class that can be fairly said to typify that which is representative and worthy in our mercantile life.

Before adjourning, the executive committee of the national association resolved to assist in urging "the passage by Congress of the measure now pending, known as the Humphrey ocean mail bill, which would do much to bring about a national development of our merchant navy"; and, further, "that it be the purpose and intent of the individual members of this committee to assist in every way possible, to the end that the bill shall become a law, believing that its passage would be of great benefit to the people of the United States."

Now, whatever else may be said, it cannot be asserted with any degree of truth that in the piano dealers of the United States, or in the executive committee of their principal association, there is any evidence to be found of a desire to promote any movement that does not look primarily to the public welfare rather than to the advancement of any selfish or special interest. Public comfort, public contentment and public prosperity are conducive to the interests of the piano trade, and it is the right as well as the duty of the piano dealers to pursue these and to preserve them.

They may be altogether wrong in thinking that our national interests can be advanced, or might be subserved, by restoring the American flag to the place it once occupied in the commerce of the world. But it must be conceded even by the most determined foe of ship subsidy that they are not, as a rule, easily misled on questions of political or social duty, and that, as a rule, they are not subject to economic illusions.

It is to be hoped that the other nations of the world will follow the example of Holland, which has announced that it will strongly support the American proposal for a permanently sitting court of arbitration. And after the court is established let each nation try to give it as little as possible to arbitrate.

A GREAT deal of personal and political bitterness is attendant upon the Pinchot-Ballinger case. In all instances of this kind the original accusations are fairly certain to be supplemented by others of a character that entitles them to be called "sensational." Mr. Ballinger has had a very active career. He has had much to do with people and affairs. In the course of his public life he has been called upon to reach many conclusions and decisions that have been unexpected and that have proved disappointing and unwelcome. It is part of the penalty of prominence that in order to perform one's duty faithfully one must at times run counter to the opinions, prejudices and interests of others.

Even Mr. Pinchot, popular as he is, is not a subject of universal admiration. His activities have raised up critics and enemies for him also. With no purpose of reflecting upon him in the least, but with the view simply of illustrating the necessity of reserving judgment in the case of Secretary Ballinger, it might be pointed out that the former chief forester is being discredited at present in many quarters. These allegations, until all the facts are known, should be given no more credence by fair-minded people than the charges against Secretary Ballinger.

Those who are so disposed may believe anything they hear. When it once becomes known that they are credulous they will be kept busy listening. Those who do not care to hear anything but the truth, on the other hand, will have to seek it, and be patient in the search for it. The truth is not gossiped. We shall have the whole truth in the Pinchot-Ballinger affair in due time. Let us be patient in the search for it.

If Governor Hughes should retire and Mr. Loeb should succeed him. New York would still have a careful man at the head of affairs, provided Mr. Loeb looked after his duties as closely as he does now while collector of the port of New York.

Not Federalization but Uniformity

Uniformity in legislation among the states was the one distinct and impressive note sounded by the National Civic Federation at its meeting in Washington on Tuesday. Whether intentionally or unintentionally, those who engaged in the discussion were practically in agreement with regard to a panacea for recognized faults in administration that may prove to be a solution for a rather perplexing problem.

The meeting of the state executives close by is indicative of the gravity of this problem. The nation has become too large to be subject to divergent local laws. Interstate commerce and interstate relationship generally, it is felt on all sides, should not longer be hampered by conflicting and often antagonistic state enactments.

On the other hand, the desire is universal that the integrity of the states shall be preserved; the opposition to continued, or progressive, centralization of power in federal authority is pronounced. Here is the problem. There should be a satisfactory solution for every human riddle; the speakers at the National Civic Federation meeting seem to be agreed upon the one required to meet this case.

Seem to be agreed upon the one required to meet this case.

Of course, they are not the original discoverers of the solution.

Senator Root, in his repeated warm methods if they would save them, perhaps, the first to point the way out of this dilemma, states bestir themselves and readjusted by the nation, the nation will be force to meet this case.

It is covered to meet this c hands." The governors conference is partly a response to this admonition; by it William George Gordon's useful activity with regard to the House of Governors was in a large measure inspired. What the Civic Federation speakers should be credited with is the clearness and force with which they apply the doctrine of uniformity to the uppermost questions of the hour.

Many of the states have taken steps to promote the uniform laws movement. John C. Richberg, who is president of the Illinois uniform laws commission, was one of those who addressed the meeting, and his summary of the situation is comprehensive as well as educational. "Where our problems are national, where state independence means national chaos," he says, "either the federal government as representing the united people must act for the people, or the states must join hands, sacrifice sectional desires, individual methods of business, even, perhaps, climatic habits of thought, and adopt uniform legislation as the medium for expressing their diverse interests, even as a common language carries the expression of their divergent thoughts."

Very well put. This is the fingerpost that points the way out of "too much federalization." And while a high order of patriotism will be required to induce the states to be guided by it, there is gratification and encouragement in the knowledge that many of them are already looking in the right direction.

FIALLEY'S comet has been superseded by an interloper first discovered a few nights ago in South Africa. It is to be hoped there will be no contention between the two rivals regarding which is the more popular and brilliant attraction. There is room and glory enough for both.

The announced determination of Governor Hughes of New York not to be a candidate for a renomination and his statement that he will retire to private life have caused general regret to be expressed. He has proved himself an able executive and an active worker for the public welfare in matters both state and national. The retirement of such a man can only be regarded as a loss. It is reported that the belief is held in some quarters, however, that the retirement of Mr. Hughes will be merely temporary. The presumption is entertained that he will be a candidate for nomination for President in 1912. Some say that Governor Hughes is taking a long look ahead and exhibiting remarkable shrewdness; that he could add nothing to his public reputation if he were again elected Governor, while if he were defeated he would be in an unfortunate position.

Yet a Washington despatch states that Governor Hughes has given denial to the report that he would be a candidate for nomination for President. When he was asked, "Does your decision to retire as Governor mean that you will be a candidate for higher office in 1912?" he replied, "It does not mean anything of the sort; it means simply that I shall resume the practise of law when I finish my present term of office. I shall have served the state for four years and I shall be entitled to a return to private life." Notwithstanding this declaration, it is claimed the time may come when there will be an insistent demand on the part of the people that he accept the nomina-

It is explained that Governor Hughes' present decision to return to his law practise was due to his desire to insure the interests of his family financially. He has spent $40,000 more than his salary in running the executive mansion since he has been Governor. The expenses of the establishment have been $20,000 a year, while his salary as Governor is $10,000. The revelation of these conditions has been followed by the introduction in the New York Senate of a bill increasing the salary of the Governor to $25,000.

Regarding Mr. Hughes' future, it is confidently intimated that should another vacancy take place in the supreme court during the administration of President Taft, Mr. Hughes can have it if he will accept it. Moreover, the Governor is hardly one to try the political effect of such an announcement as he has just made with reference to state office, and politicians do not question that he means what he says when he declares he will not run for the governorship again. Evidently it is time for the New York Republicans to look about for a worthy successor.

No Sunday Baseball A BILL to legalize the playing of baseball has been, or is to be, presented in the Ohio Legislature. It is said that the promoters of the measure hope to overcome considerable objection to it by having a provision inserted prohibiting an admission price for Sunday games. Sunday baseball is tolerated in many of the states; under certain restrictions it is allowed in many communities that are otherwise exacting with relation to the enforcement of the Sunday laws. Worthy of particular attention it is that in communities where the widest latitude as been given to Sunday baseball in the past there is greatest opposition to it in the present, and this opposition does not come solely or mainly from the class known as "church people," but from the citizenship in general and from loyal and even ardent friends of the game.

Almost invariably the Sunday restrictions imposed in communities desirous of being looked upon as "liberal" are soon largely evaded or wholly ignored. Residents who desire to spend their Sundays in peace soon find their neighborhoods invaded by noisy throngs. Lovers of the game are frequently called upon under such circumstances to explain the disorder or worse that it seems to occasion, or to apologize for it. The net result is discontent and dissatisfaction on all sides.

The usual course of argument may well be set aside in flealing with the Ohio proposal. All right-thinking people, including those of varying shades of religious belief, will oppose the legalization of ball-playing on Sunday. Many of these people, no doubt, have tolerated it, but they have not countenanced it. Rather than appear "narrow" they have accepted Sunday baseball as they have accepted many other unwelcome things—under protest. This is very different, however, from consenting to its sanction by law.

But the matter is one that may be contemplated by friends of the game from an altogether different angle. At present baseball is unquestionably popular. Generally speaking, it is the one game in which all Americans take a common interest. It has friends among all classes. It is in the very heyday of its prosperity professionally. Why make it offensive to any class? Why imperil its standing? To be plain, why run the risk of making it disreputable and a nuisance? THAT "the times are changed and we are changed in them" is apparent in almost any field of human endeavor to which we give even casual consideration. In no other phase of experience have the changes the years have brought been more striking than those that have come into the domestic activities of women and in the single matter of providing themselves and others in their care with wearing apparel. Quite recently it has been an-

The "Ready-Made" Age nounced that a corporation capitalized for $300,000,000 to control everything in the manufacture of women's clothing and furnishings is under consideration in New York city. This announcement means that a very large part of the apparel worn by women today is factorymade and is delivered into their hands in a finished state, "ready to wear." All must agree how perfectly absurd it would have been for any organization to have tried to "corner the market" on women's apparel in the old days when the first "first lady of the land." in her quiet, majestic manner, looked after the needs of her household circle. We are told that Martha Washington was plain in her dress and cared little for the luxurious ornaments deemed appropriate for the rich and great of her time. In her own home the spinning-wheels and looms were kept constantly going, and many of her dresses were woven by herself and her servants. General Washington wore at his inauguration a full suit of fine cloth, the handiwork of his own household. At a ball given in New Jersey in honor of Mrs. Washington, she wore a "simple russet gown" and a white handkerchief about her neck, thereby setting a modest example for the women of revolutionary days, who could ill afford to spend their time or money as lavishly as they might have desired.

On one occasion she gave the best proof of her success in domestic manufactures by the exhibition of two of her dresses, which were composed of cotton, striped with silk, and entirely homemade. The silk stripes in the fabric were woven from the ravelings of brown silk stockings and old crimson chair covers. It is a far cry from then till now, when the spinning-wheel has passed away, or if it remain is an object of ornament rather than an implement of use. The family loom is but a memory or at best a cobwebbed curiosity in the attic of some old-time home. Even the more modern sewing-machine is no longer deemed the household necessity of years past. Why spin or weave or sew when everything can be bought "ready to wear" for less than it costs to make it at home?

Nowadays women's tailors are almost as common as men's, and ready-made garments for clothing women from "top to toe" are on sale everywhere. The making of practical, useful things has been largely transferred from the homes to the factories, which capital and clever men can organize and control. Perhaps the last faint protest against the factory's right to make solely for money the many objects that were once fashioned with loving care still lingers in some chimney corner where a cherished grandmother, true to the habits of thrift and industry inculcated in youth, improves her time by knitting old-fashioned yarn socks and mittens that are more often worn for the purpose of pleasing and complimenting their revered maker than for any excellence they may possess over similar articles offered for sale in the public shops. There were no strikes of tens of thousands of shirtwaist makers when grandmother was a girl.

THE MEN who are planning to succeed the present speaker of the House should bear in mind the truth that the presumably fortunate one who finally secures the speakership is not likely to find it all smooth sailing. Even with a Cannon on board it has been warmly attacked by numerous foes of late.

The Outlook in Portugal MARQUIS JULIO DE VILHENA has resigned his leadership of the conservative party of the "Regeneradores." This is an event in Portuguese political history compared to which the accession of King Manuel and the circumstances accompanying it appear in the light of a mere dynastic change. Conseilhero de Vilhena is unquestionably one of the ablest and most brilliant and also one of the most ambitious public men Portugal has produced in a long time, and when a man of his influence withdraws from the leadership of a great party, he is prompted by motives of unusual weight. His aim is seen to be complete independence of the crown in order to be free to lead an opposition of unprecedented aggressiveness. What is the cause of this sudden rupture between King Manuel and the former head of the so-called "liberal coalition," formed at the instance of the King himself, between the remnants of the "Regeneradores" and "Dissidentes"? As far as can be gathered from the Portuguese press, the cause is an alleged breach of agreements, or promises, on the part of the crown—promises, supposed to have been made at the time that party coalition was formed.

Marquis de Vilhena, it appears, by reason of these promises, had counted on being called to form the new cabinet when the Wenceslau de Lima ministry fell; instead of which the King entrusted Francisco Veiga Beirao with that task. Senhor Beirao succeeded in completing a new cabinet with unusual ease and celerity, and this new government is quite notable for being composed wholly of "Progressistas" instead of representing the usual compromise between this and the other historic party of constitutional Portugal, the "Regeneradores."

The absence of the traditional pact between the two parties—by which the will and interests of the people have, for a generation or more, been successfully ignored—is in itself an event. And when it is considered that the new cabinet proposes, and may prove quite strong enough to pass, electoral reform as well as important amendments to the constitution, there is nothing fantastic in the inference that Portugal may be on the eve of an era in which the people's voice will actually be heard at the polls.

It is impossible not to connect this momentous development with King Manuel's recent visit to England. Time and again, regeneration from inside alone has failed in Portugal. The present determined effort, even at the cost of a political rupture with powerful politicians like de Vilhena and his satellites, points to support from without, on the basis of the time-honored alliance between the dynasties and peoples of Britain and Lusitania.

In freeing a man arrested for creating a disturbance in a restaurant because he had been compelled to wait a long time for the meal he had ordered, a Chicago judge said, "It is not necessary to wait longer than a reasonable time for an order to be filled." But it would have clarified matters still more if the judge had defined the meaning of "a reasonable time."
